

Who killed the American family?

Not so with today's lawyers, or more particularly today's judges, who on a daily basis fill their pockets with the '30 pieces of silver' and proceed to destroy the very foundation upon which their own country was built and became the world's greatest nation. And the mortar which always held this foundation together is of course the family unit.

As the 60's spawned a revolution in morality and ideology unacceptable to American ideals, those that promoted this anti-American agenda realized that their cause was in direct conflict with the Christian ethics and morality inherent in and represented by the Law of the Land; The United States Constitution. In order to achieve any semblance of success, they had to pierce the armor and dissect the soul of the founding fathers vision and the greatest document ever produced in the civilized world. And there was only one group that could do it and they were more than willing to accept the '30 pieces of silver.'

LBJ started the destruction of the American family in 1964 ;

- Seed Three: Planted on August 20, 1964 -

On August 20, 1964, President Lyndon Johnson (Georgetown Law School) signed the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964.

Now for the first time, a person who was not elderly or disabled could receive a living from the American government. (The American work ethic, the backbone of American Tradition, was poisoned.)

Now for the first time, a woman didn't need a husband to support her baby.

Now for the first time, immorality and procreation outside the family were enabled and financed by the government.

Now for the first time, more and more children would grow up without a father.

Now for the first time, citizens would stand on the grocery line spending their hard earned dollars while a 'mother' with 2,3,4,5,6 children and no father, would pay using food stamps. (The more children, and in many cases the more different fathers, the more money and food stamps were provided.)

LBJ's 'Seed of Destruction' is now being fertilized by his lawyer 'brothers' on the 'Supreme' Court and the end is in sight with their latest blow to America's morality and traditions.

Phyllis Schlafly points to 'judge's unilateral decisions' that bust up society's foundation

Political support for traditional marriage seemed to evaporate in the summer of 2013. The U.S. Supreme Court did not rule that there is a constitutional right to same-sex marriage, but the homosexuals are behaving as though it did and filing lawsuits in many states to expand the Court's decision, while the advocates of traditional marriage have retreated into silence.

It wasn't just that the Supreme Court ruled that the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA) is unconstitutional. It was the way the 5-to-4 majority issued what Justice Scalia called a "jaw-dropping ... assertion of judicial supremacy over the people's Representatives."

....These government busybodies have co-opted the centuries-old concept of "the best interest of the child," changing its meaning to justify a judge (rather than parents) making all decisions about children.

....Millions of divorced dads have discovered that a judge on his own can decide that fathers have no right to see their kids, but must pay child support anyway. Many of our social ills are attributable to children being cut off from a relationship with their dads.

....The nuclear family is the essential building block of a free society with limited government. The nuclear family is essential to have an economic structure of limited government because, without it, the government moves in to provide what the family would have done for itself. There are now 79 separate programs handing out taxpayers' cash and valuable benefits totaling nearly a trillion dollars annually.

....All those who care about preserving religious and economic freedom that is the hallmark of America should realize that we cannot reassert constitutional rights, private enterprise, balanced budgets, reduction of government spending and freedom from government management of our lives without the traditional intact, self-supporting nuclear family functioning as the foundation of our society.
